Other members included Mr. Sanjeeva Mahesh (Sri Lanka) PSBU International Project Director, Dr. Karl Meneghella (Australia) PSBU International Academic Director, Dr. Steve Cochrane (UK) PSBU International Advisor, Mr. Amirhossein Taghipour (Iran) Head of International Research Department, and a team from EBS Global Solutions (Sri Lanka).

The delegation's report highlighted three main discussion points: the quality assessment findings, the university's strengths, and recommendations for the future.

Dr. Karl Meneghella presented a detailed list of the university's strengths, which included:

- Management: The university's leadership was praised for its proactive approach to long-term strategy, data-driven decision-making, and open communication with students. The delegation noted the enthusiasm of leadership, the commitment of faculty, and the positive mindset of both staff and students.
- Faculty and Staff: The report emphasized the commitment to professional development for teachers and the strategic investment in human resources, including international staff, to support globalization.
- Inclusivity and Community: The university was commended for its support of underprivileged students, commitment to gender equality, and promotion of religious harmony. The team also highlighted the university's community responsibility, including collaboration on development projects and a health post that serves everyone.
- Environment and Students: The university's "Community-Friendly School" initiative and pursuit of Sustainable Development Goals were recognized. The report also noted strong support for students, particularly outstanding international students, through partnerships like EBS Global.

Dr. Meneghella also provided key recommendations for future development:

- Infrastructure: The report suggested adding recreational areas and sports equipment, developing "smart classrooms," and installing more modern facilities.
- Internationalization: The team recommended expanding international partnerships, particularly with EBS Global, and increasing the university's collection of e-journals and e-books.
- Health and Safety: Recommendations included improving accessibility in all buildings, standardizing and upgrading all bathrooms, adding more safety signage, and expanding the resources available at the campus health post.

Dr. Steve McKee, from the IEAC, shared his personal observations, noting that students were highly engaged and knowledgeable. He also praised the welcoming nature of the faculty. After his campus tour, he concluded that classrooms were well-suited for teaching, the computer lab met international standards, dormitories were appropriate for residents, and the auditorium was "excellent."

Ultimately, the university's commitment to meeting international standards resulted in a positive assessment across seven key areas:

1. Management, systems, and administrative operations.
2. Environment and health safety.
3. Teaching and learning.
4. Student welfare.
5. Curriculum.
6. Quality assurance and improvement.
7. Marketing and student recruitment.

In his closing remarks, H.E. Ngoun Sdechpheakdey expressed his sincere gratitude to the IEAC, ACC, and all international partners. He thanked them for their collaboration in elevating the quality of education at the university and helping it achieve its long-term vision.
