Pro Vice-Chancellor, Corporate and International Development

c. £100,000 • Chelmsford

Anglia Ruskin University are seeking to appoint to this critical position following the current postholder's announced retirement at the end of May 2013. Today, with a student population of over 30,000, we are a major force for higher education in the East of England. We have devoted significant resources to grow successfully our UK and international base. Recruitment of students from overseas has increased fourfold in the last five years and we have ambitious targets for future numbers.

Our next PVC, Corporate and International Development will continue the work to retain us as a serious player in the international student market, by leading our international activities. We want to keep up the growth in recruitment to on and off-campus pathways which will demand collaborative working with our four Faculties and other Support Services.

The other exciting and vital aspect of the role is to lead our Corporate Marketing and Development activities including PR, the website, admissions (home and international) and Development and Alumni. Our new PVC will need to raise the research profile and champion our considerable successes.

The role requires a true leader who is both innovative and ambitious, who can work with senior stakeholders internally and externally and represent the university credibly; a global awareness and cultural sensitivity is mandatory. This is an ideal role for a driven and determined individual who can work to demanding targets and outcomes, lead our international activities, has a flair for marketing and can manage a breadth of responsibilities all linked to growth and success. You will have experience of international business development and marketing and will have demonstrated achievement in driving growth in similar strategic and operational contexts. The post will involve regular overseas travel.
