Appointment of Vice-Chancellor

Following the announcement of Professor David Maguire's retirement at the end of 2019, the University of Greenwich is seeking to appoint a Vice-Chancellor with exceptional leadership qualities who will build on our achievements to ensure that we become the best modern university in London for student success and research excellence.

Greenwich is a special place because of our commitment to transforming lives through inspired teaching and research and the energy and enthusiasm of our students and staff. Our recent achievements include a 'Silver' award in the TEF, improvements in the proportion of students graduating with good honours degrees, growth in our research and enterprise income and the quality of our research outputs, rising levels of graduate employment, and an investment of more than £150 million since 2013 in laboratories, teaching spaces and student facilities.

As the University's chief executive and senior academic officer, the Vice-Chancellor will be passionate about fulfilling Greenwich's mission of transforming lives through inspired teaching and learning, and will uphold our values of ambition, creativity, determination, excellence and inclusivity. They will provide inspirational leadership to the institution's staff to ensure that Greenwich is academically and financially sustainable, and that we deliver excellent outcomes for our students, our graduates and society.

Further details of the role and how to apply are available at:

PROFESSORS OF ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE AND FINANCE & TECHNOLOGY

At the University of Manchester we are driving digital/AI innovation and transformation to address some of the major challenges facing our society.

The University is now inviting applications from outstanding candidates for appointment to three new Professorial positions:

- Professor of Artificial Intelligence in the Faculty of Biology, Medicine and Health (FBMH)
- Professor of Finance & Technology (FinTech) in the Faculty of Humanities (FHUMS)
- Professor of Artificial Intelligence in the Faculty of Science and Engineering (FSE)

These three appointments are being made in support of Digital Futures, the University's strategic response to the challenges and opportunities presented by the digital revolution. The Digital Futures programme brings together a multidisciplinary community of over 850 researchers from across the University's three faculties.

The successful candidates will each assume a leadership role in artificial intelligence (FBMH and FSE) or finance & technology (FHUMS) within their faculty. They will have significant opportunities for intellectual interaction and collaboration with other leading researchers including through the University's partnership with the Alan Turing Institute.

Candidates for the FBMH and FHUMS positions will bring a distinguished track record of research within a relevant field of artificial intelligence or finance & technology, respectively, along with proven research leadership experience and the ability to generate and lead interdisciplinary collaborations and to apply their expertise to challenges in the health and care sector or in finance & technology. Candidates for the FSE role will have an excellent track record as a distinguished research leader or through relevant applied experience and expertise in the public or private sector.

The University of Manchester is the UK's largest single-site university. It is a place where research has a global impact, where students experience outstanding teaching and learning, helping them to develop into tomorrow's leaders, and where all activity is enriched by a commitment to social responsibility. The University was ranked 34th in the world, eighth in Europe and sixth in the UK in the 2018 Academic Ranking of World Universities.
