Our city is our laboratory: welcome to urban, ever-changing Rotterdam

With its huge port, famously multicultural population, and many multinational companies, Rotterdam – the Netherlands' second biggest city – is an environment full of cases, data and partners for research. Thanks to its international train station and local airport, Rotterdam is also an excellent base to explore Europe. English is an unofficial second language here and nearly everyone you meet will love to speak English with you, even off of campus.

The university centres around a main campus in the east of Rotterdam, while our medical centre is located right in the city centre and our development studies programme is based nearby in 'the international capital of peace and justice', The Hague. You can count on safe and convenient metros, trams, buses, and trains to get around, but you'll find that students most often make their way by bike.

Working with the city to optimise health: Generation R

At our medical centre, Erasmus MC, researchers lead a long-term study that captures information about children from fetal life until young adulthood in the multi-ethnic urban population of Rotterdam. The study includes the largest detailed database of scanned children in the world, providing unique insight into how to optimise the health of a population anywhere around the globe.

Current role: Executive Compensation Consultant, Willis Towers Watson, Mexico City

"My Human Resource Management programme mixed theory and practice, and I think that set me apart from other candidates for my role at Willis Towers Watson. I believe it also helped that I gained a lot of confidence from living abroad and studying in English."

Highly reasonable tuition & one-year programmes

Dutch higher education offers incredible value; programmes for the 2017 – 2018 academic year will cost roughly € 2,000 for European Union (EU)/ European Economic Area (EEA) students, and tuition ranges from € 3,900 to € 24,500 for students from other parts of the world. Cost of living is very reasonable in Rotterdam compared to other major European cities such as Amsterdam and Paris.

The majority of our master programmes take one year. However, there are some part-time opportunities or variations – such as research masters for those who wish to continue to a PhD and executive programmes for professionals – that take up to two years.

Though the Netherlands does not have a wide tradition of scholarship, there are some wonderful country-, university-, and faculty-specific aid options that may be relevant for you.

Find information about scholarships and grants for studying in the Netherlands on www.studyinholland.nl.

From master to PhD researcher

Each year more than 300 academics complete their PhD at Erasmus University Rotterdam. All faculties have their own doctorate programme, which normally amounts to a four-year track during which you perform research on a particular subject under the supervision of a professor.

Completing a PhD is a requirement to become a university professor, researcher, or scientist in many fields. In the course of your PhD you will follow courses and workshops, and attend conferences, all geared towards enhancing your research and networking skills.

The Netherlands is known for its relatively flexible, or 'flat', management culture. This is reflected in the PhD environment as well, where candidates are considered fellow researchers and treated as colleagues rather than students. Positions for internal PhD candidates (with full employment status) are announced on the university's website and/or on www.academictransfer.com.

"I'm not per se interested in how people use mobile apps, but how they can create them".

Lela Mosemghvdlishvili
 PhD candidate

Lela researches the politics of mobile code and devices. She is interested in understanding the driving forces behind the process of technological development. Her research project focuses on how mobile code can be developed for smartphones.
