ABOUT UAH

The University of Alcalá (UAH) is one of Europe’s oldest. Its origins can be traced as far back as the Studium Generale, or programme of university studies, that was instituted on 20 May 1293 under the protection of King Sancho IV of Castile. In 1499, Cardinal Cisneros founded the Colegio Mayor de San Ildefonso or University, thus converting Alcalá into the first university town of the modern era, which earned it in 1998 the accolade of UNESCO World Heritage Site, a distinction shared with only four other universities worldwide.

The UAH is a modern, medium-sized institution, recognised as a trend-setter in Europe and America. Traditional humanities and social science degrees sit side by side with cutting-edge programmes in scientific fields such as Health Sciences and Engineering, one reason for its high international profile and for its dynamic role in regional activity.

Some of its main strengths are friendliness, quality international outlook and social commitment. Its goal is to be a leading university globally, socially committed, inclusive and open to the world. Moreover, it seeks to contribute to the advancement of knowledge and the education of men and women through quality teaching, research excellence and the fostering of ethical, socially responsible attitudes.

As a benchmark centre for the teaching of Spanish, the UAH welcomes over 1,500 students from 50 countries who get to know our language and culture through Alcalingua, our Centre for Teaching Spanish as a Foreign Language, which is authorised by the Cervantes Institute to award the Diploma in Spanish as a Foreign Language (DELE).

ALCALÁ DE HENARES, WORLD HERITAGE SITE

The City of Alcalá de Henares is in the Autonomous Region of Madrid, 30 km from Madrid on the Madrid-Barcelona motorway and 20 km from Madrid’s international Adolfo Suárez-Barajas Airport. At present it has a population of 200,000.

Important archaeological remains have been found in Alcalá de Henares and stand as testimony to the presence in the city of different peoples and cultures. The first town on the site was the ancient Celtiberian settlement of “Kom Ikkesancom Buto”. The Romans called it “Complutum”, the origin of the name given to those born in the city, Complutenses.

When the Moors invaded Alcalá, the old city was gradually abandoned and became a fortress known as “Al Qalát Wadi-I-Hiyara”, which is the origin of its name today.

Once reconquered by the Christians in 1118, the city became the seat and residence of the Archbishops of Toledo, who built its defensive walls and oversaw its growth.

King Alfonso VII of Castile gave Alcalá and its land to the Archbishops of Toledo, who built an important castle which would later become the Archbishop’s Palace, where monarchs and nobles resided. An emperor and a queen were born in the palace, and it was also the scene for the first interview between Christopher Columbus and the Catholic Kings, Fernando and Isabel.

In 1499, Cardinal Cisneros founded a university in the town, which would soon become one of the main centres of European renaissance culture. As building work intensified under the impulse of the Counter-Reformation, the city was transformed into a unique cultural model which would serve as a model for Spanish town-planning in the Modern Age.

During the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, the city underwent a progressive decline which meant the University’s relocation to Madrid. It was not until 1977 that the University of Alcalá as we know it today came into being, in the process recovering and restoring the old college buildings so that they might once again perform their original function of centres for teaching and research.

In 1998, UNESCO declared the University and the historic precinct of Alcalá de Henares a World Heritage Site in recognition of their being the best and most fully developed model of Renaissance town-planning, education and culture.

Alcalá de Henares is also the birthplace of one of Spanish literature’s greatest writers. Miguel de Cervantes was born in the city 1547. He is universally renowned for his Don Quijote, considered by many to be the first modern novel and one of the great works of literature. The Cervantes Institute was created in his honour as a public institution designed to promote and teach the Spanish language and to disseminate Spanish and Latin American culture.

The link between the city and the Spanish language became even closer with the creation in 1976 of the Cervantes Prize for Spanish Literature which is awarded annually in the “Paraninfo” or Great Hall of the University. This prize is the most important award for creative writing in the Spanish language.

Among the city’s monuments, particularly worth a visit are the Colegio Mayor de San Ildefonso, also known as the “Old University”, the cathedral, the Archbishop’s Palace, the Miguel de Cervantes Birthplace Museum, the Calle Mayor, Cervantes Square and the ruins of the ancient Roman city of Complutum.

Alcalá de Henares’s transport network ensures frequent and fast, direct communications with Madrid by bus and train and with the Adolfo Suarez Madrid-Barajas Airport by bus.

All that, together with a wide range of hotels, eateries and leisure activities has made the city an emerging tourist destination, well positioned in the Spanish context of cultural tourism and congresses.
Madrid lies at the geographical centre of the Iberian Peninsula and is strategically located for access to other tourist destinations such as Segovia, Toledo, Aranjuez, El Escorial and Cuenca.

True to its traditions, it is a cosmopolitan city blending culture, entertainment and business. Its university life is another of its attractions since it is home to students from Spain and abroad who choose to study at Madrid’s universities because of their reputation and prestige.

Its historic part is a rival to that of any major European city. Its main thoroughfare is the Gran Vía, also known as “little Broadway”. Also worth visiting are the “Barrio de las Letras” (Writers’ Quarter), the Latina and Malasaña quarters, and the Madrid of the Austrias, where one can take a leisurely stroll and enjoy typical Madrilenian and Spanish cuisine.

Some of the city’s principal architectural and artistic sites include the Royal Palace, the Almudena Cathedral, the Plaza Mayor, the Alcalá Gate, and the collections held by the Prado, Thyssen and Reina Sofía museums, among other.

Its magnificent facilities (the IFEMA Madrid Exhibition Centre, various conference halls), its excellent transport network (which boasts some of Europe’s most important infrastructures, like the Adolfo Suarez Madrid-Barajas Airport or the Madrid underground system), its wide range of accommodation and services and its cutting-edge audiovisual and communications technology have transformed Madrid into an unbeatable business destination.
